History of Ohio's State Forests

Acquisition of the first state forests began in 1916, originally to be used as testing grounds for reforestation of tree species. Land acquisition later broadened to include land of scenic and recreational values and to restore forest cover to land that had been abandoned and abused. Today, Ohio's 24 state forests cover more than 200,000 acres and provide an abundance of benefits for everyone to enjoy. With the advantage of decades of management, Ohio's foresters are enhancing nature's growth cycle and continuing to produce some of the finest hardwood trees in the world on state forest lands. Forest management activities such as timber stand improvement, prescribed fire, and harvesting are employed to enhance the health, vigor, and natural regeneration of the forest. But foresters' concerns go well beyond the trees. Evaluations of water, soil, wildlife habitat, age and condition of the vegetation, recreational opportunities, and aesthetics are considered in preparation of area management plans. This process ensures that visitors may enjoy many outdoor activities including camping, hiking, horseback riding, wildlife watching, hunting, and scenic touring.

Welcome to Perry State Forest

Acquisition of the land that became Perry State Forest started in 1961 with the purchase of 4,400 acres from Sunnyside Coal Company, an affiliate of Sunnyside Mining Company of West Virginia. From 1961 to 1965, the area was known as Perry Reclamation Area and was one of three reclamation areas in Ohio administered by the Division of Reclamation. In 1966, the three reclamation areas became state forests, including Perry State Forest.

Whether you come to Perry to ride APVs (all purpose vehicles), go horseback riding, hunt or just visit, you will have an enjoyable state forest experience. Much of Perry State Forest was strip mined for coal prior to existing reclamation law, resulting in very rugged, sometimes barren terrain. Since the state acquired the area in 1961, some reclamation has been accomplished, including a large area along County Road 48. Several reforestation and test tree plantings have been established on the forest.

Perry APV Area

The Perry State Forest APV area is one of four state forest APV areas in Ohio. It was established in 1972. This APV area is the only state-owned scramble area on approximately 1,800 acres. The APV area is a "ride at your own risk" area. Within the APV scramble area, Perry State Forest boasts more than 24 miles of marked and challenging APV trails. There are also unmarked user-developed trails in the scramble area where riders are urged to use caution and not exceed their riding capabilities. The Perry APV area is one of the most popular public riding areas in Ohio. Picnic tables and latrines are provided at the parking area.
